

Speaker Bios- March 5, 2019 Stakeholder's Meeting

Paula Timco, partner and CSO of nuboHealth, a Cleveland healthcare technology company. Paula has 20 years of healthcare operations, process engineering and IT project management experience. Paula has held executive positions at the Cleveland Clinic and University Hospitals Health Systems and holds an MBA and a BA with accreditation in Process Engineering. Her company, nuboHealth, focuses on aggregating and integrating disparate sources of health data.

Ellen Brzytwa is a 45-year resident of Lakewood where she and her husband have raised four children. She is a nurse with Masters degrees in both psychiatric nursing and public health. She is currently a trustee of Lutheran Hospital and for the American Hospital Association's Regional Health Policy Committee. She has been a health care consultant for over 25 years, working at the local, state and national levels on community health and nursing education.

Daniel Cohn serves as Vice President of Strategy with the Mt. Sinai Health Care Foundation, where he leads grant making in community health and public policy. In this role, Dan oversees the Foundation's local, state and federal policy agenda, with a particular focus on maternal and infant health, early childhood development, and access to high-quality health care. Daniel's academic background is in public health and ethics, and he is a proud "boomerang" Clevelander.

Katie Miller was raised and currently lives in Lakewood. She has a Master's in Epidemiology from Stanford and is currently completing her MBA at Case Western. She has worked for a Swiss multinational healthcare company called Rosh for over 20 years, does yoga, rows and is a triathlete. After living in California and Switzerland, she chose to return to Lakewood with her family for reasons related to exactly what she is here to talk about today – "Blue Zones"
